

Fish to Fall in Love With!

In the vastness of the ocean, finding a mate can be challenging... To get around this most fish species just release their gametes into the water column when it's time to reproduce and hope that a few of the millions of eggs that are released get fertilised and survive to adulthood.

Wolffish are an exception, they pair off for the mating season and work together to guard their eggs for several months until they hatch. This level of parental involvement and cooperation between mates is rare in fish species.

Have a go at colouring in this loving wolffish pair and send us a photo so we can see your masterpiece!

Atlantic Wolffish (Anarhichas lupus)

